FUTURA

A good place to take it off:
the place where opposites attract.

My wife loves white. I love my wife. And black. While she refuels on light in the shower, my five o'clock shadow is in perfect harmony with the floor. By the way, it cools passively in the summer. And stores heat in the winter. And believe me, both of us like that.

The most beautiful space in my life is the space that my family occupies. Then comes the bathroom. When I am there and feel the underfloor heating beneath my feet, I am Cleopatra on the banks of the Nile. But I don't have to brush away the sand from between my toes. And my nose is prettier.

It's nice when something is more than just nice.

I always tell my mother how easy-care my floor is in contrast to wood. And that it almost never gets dusty, because it is anti-static. My mother always answers that I am an aesthete and things like that have never interested me. But she is thrilled for my cleaner.

Showing your colours in black and white.

I like it when the ambience outside is reflected in my rooms. The green of the trees. Or the yellow of the sun. And even when the sky is grey, it shines in my place. The natural light and the natural materials of the polished floor are simply inseparable.

If I ever become perfect, the next thing I'll want to do is become better. Nothing less. But if you look at my bathroom, you'll see that it is entirely possible. The perfect precision of every single tile turns every square millimetre into an experience. A beautiful example in my everyday environment.

To my daughter, our bathroom is the Land of the Dragons: a waterfall of glass and a floor full of shimmering scales that fell from dragons in flight. I like that idea. And the fact that the metallic surfaces are entirely non-toxic and vapour-free.

I like it elegant. I like it timeless. I like it warm. I like so many things. And what I like best is everything at once. And when I think about it and look down, I say to myself: why can't everything be as perfect as my floor?
